SOUTHERN CITY

Motorists Pleased With Savannah's Prospects for Obtaining Contest.

By HARRY WARD.

Washington motorists are delighted with the news that Savannah sand prize race.

Scores of motorists from this city witnessed the first running of this big race at Savannah on Thanksgiving Day, 1908, and they are anxious to see the big racing machines again it action on a circuit that is second to none in this country. Savannah's official bid for the race will be laid before the racing of ficials in New York this afternoon. A containtee with plenary powers arrived in New York those Savannah this morning and is prepared to make terms and sign contracts. A guarantee fund of $10,000 has been subscribed by the leading organizations of the Southern city and this fund will be materially increased if Savannah is awarded the race. The military officers have pledgred their commands for the policing of the course under sanction of the governor. The county commissioners have also pledged their word to put the entire convict force at work banking the turns, building crossings and placing the course in first-class shape.

Several carloads of Washington motorists will make the trip "the race is held in Savannah. It is believed the race will be held a few days prior to Thanksgiving.

Louis Weaver, one of the best known motorists in Washington, has associated himself with the Pope Automobile Company. He has a host of friends in this city, and a large measure of success is predicted for him in his new field.

A. F. McLane, of the Ohio Motor Car Company, who was one of the participants in the Munzey Historic Tour, is in the city for a few days. He is negotiating with several dealers to take the Ohlo agency and will probably close a deal this week.

Jesse Froehlich, managing director of the Benz Auto Import Company of America, stated that if Savannah holds the grand prize race he is ready to nominate three Benz cars. He said:

"I think that the move of the Motor Cups Holding Company in abandoning the plan of holding the race on the motor parkway was an excellent one and one that will be appreciated not only by the contestants, but by the motor parkway was an excellent one forly by the contestants, but by the sport of automobile racing when it can be conducted in a safe manner. In the grand prize race held in 1908 the people of Savannah showed that they were truly able to handle successfully a race of this kind, and I sincerely trust that proper negotiations can be made to take the race to Savannah."

Felice Nazzaro the famous Italian about Savannah. "That city deserves it in the United States. It has demonstrated in regularly in left field,

L'HOMME SANS FIGURE

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters. Barrabas, a sculptor, returns to his home to find his wife murdered, his daughter. Evelyne, unconscious, and his son, Polydere, a youth of twenty, gibbering in a loft. The boy says he has killed his mother, and the father writes a letter to the dead woman's brother, taking the crime on himself. Then he flees.

Barrabas seeks the house of Marcadlan, a lawyer, and his wife's brother, to whom he had written his confession. There he meets Addison Kingsley, an American milionaire, who practically kidnaps him. For $200,000 he agrees to marry Lucle Weil, with whom his strange host's son is infatuated. At Kingley's instance he changes his identity and becomes Charles Douglass, an American.

Barrabas wakes in the house of his strange host, and his transformation into Charles Douglass is completed. At Barrabas wakes in the house of his strange host, and his iransformation into Charles Douglass is completed. At luncheon he first meets Lucile Weil. Lucile Weil shows her repugnance to Barrabas, but melts a triffe when she finds he is to receive $200,000 for marrying her. In the park one day Barrabas meets his brother-in-law, Marcadian, but is not recognized.

Marcadian reveals himself as the lawyer for William Kingsley, but seems not repelled by the thought that Lucie Weil is to marry the supposed Douglas. In the course of the conversation with Addison Kingsley he expresses his confidence that Barrabas is guiltiess of wife-murder. Kingsley urges Barrabas to acquire some skin disease that will disfigure his face. William Kingsley comes to see his father. In the presence of Barrabas he declares he no longer loves Lucile Weil, but does love Evelyne Barrabas, the pretender's daughter.

Kingsley confides to Barrabas his willingness that his son shall marry the sculptor's daughter. That night Barrabas hears Kingsley and Lucie in angry alteration and the girl's death struggles. He sees Kingsley afterward washing the blood from his hands.

Angrily protesting against the murder of Lucie, Barrabas is estzed by Bambou plenty of sighs at his command, had murmured:

"Ah, the women It is terrible"

A week after the deed Kingsley, asked my brother-in-law, Marcadian, to call. By that time the high fever which had kept me to my bed had dropped. To Marcadian the millionaire told the same tale, which made Lucle's disappearance quite natural. And so Kingsley, with his usual great caution, and to make the story more plausible, threw off at a stroke all suspicions which would have sprung up in the minds of those interested in the fate of the poor girl. The assassin was sheltered from all suspicion, and I, by my silence, was constrained to serve him as an accomplice.

When Marcadian was told that Lucie had taken her revenge in such a frightful manner, he broke out into the strongest imprecations against her. He urged me to lodge a complaint against her, and offered, as a friend, to pulh is services at my command. With my heavy head swathed in bandages, made a sign in the negative, while Kingsley broke in:

"That was my first thought, but it could not make my friend consent. He with his nobility of soul, which I fully appreciate, rates above his own personal vengeance the joint interest of my son and your charming niece. If he were to take legal measures, it might have the effect of placing my son in an unfavorable light in Evelyne's eyes. She knows of his former engagement, and it would cause annoyance to them both. What good would it do in the e2d The French Juries are, as you well know, my dear advocate, very leihent toward women's emetional crimes. And after all is said and done, it could not not alter my dear riends disfigurement. I personally am friends will. We are not me submit to the favoration, and to would cause annoyance to them both. What good would it do in the end The French juries are, as you well know, my dear advocate, very lenient toward women's emetional crimes And after all is said and done it could not alter my dear friend's disfigurement. I personally am for vengeance, vengeance in the extreme, but, of course, I must submit to Charles' will. We are well rid of that creature, and we are sure of never seeing her again. She has escaped; let her go.

He then told the lawyer not to tell

Secret practice is never popular with the undergraduates, even at the end of the season, when the coaches want to put on the finishing touches. The gates have never been closed so early as they were this year, and the undergraduate body has probably never been more interested in the game than at present. The coaches, however, felt that they needed privacy to work out their ideas of the new rules, and for this reason the public is not likely to see much more of the Yale team except in practice games.

Philbin has been played regularly at fullback, but thus far his work has been below varsity average. He will have to improve a whole lot before he will be up to the standard. None of the other candidates for fullback has done anything as yet which has attracted attention.
